HONGKONG, AFRIL 9TH, 1890.

THE suppression of the Secret Societies in the Straits Settlements is an event of historical importance. In Hongkong we have the Triad Society, which is generally believed to promote crime by protecting criminals, its membership being largely composed of this class; but its political influence is almost nil. The Secret Societies in the Straits were vastly more important institutions, and the influence they exercised on the Chinese community, the most considerable section of the population in the Southern Colony, was almost greater than that of the Government itself. If they manouvres from the native papers, our translator, standing menace to British authority, they exerted a very powerful check on its exercise our ranks become still further thinned we shall and retarded the natural development of the munity. Efforts had previously been made to bring them under control, which had all proved more or less abortive. To Sir CECIL SMITH, with his strong will and intimate of suppressing the Societies altogether. Even the European community was alarmed at it, and the Bill necessary to carry the scheme into effect was not passed without opthe Ordinance having received Her Majesty's ancient order of things has been effected public peace. months' leave of absence, said he had not made public announcement of it before for the simple reason that unless matters went on satisfactorily with regard to the suppression of the Secret Societies he would certainly under no circumstances have left the Colony; but he thought now he could satisfy not only the Council but the public generally that the suppression of the Secret Societies had gone on extremely successfully. His Excellency is to be congratulated on the very excellent qualities of statesmanship he has exhibited and on the happy result achieved. He has accomplished a task which probably no other Governor could have done. It required not only great courage, but also infinite tact, full knowledge of the question in all its details, and, above all, possession of the confidence of the community The confidence of the Chinese is difficult to gain, but when given is given fully and unreservedly. Sir CECH. SMITH possesses it in the highest degree. The Chinese in the Straits trust him implicitly, and when they found that he had fully determined to carry his intentions into effect they submitted without the least display of disaffection. The suppression of the Secret Societies is a striking illustration RUSSET LEATHER, and RED LEATHER of how much can be effected by a capable and determined man. Now, after reading the case of Gordon v. Veg liano, we say, " If you want to buy a florse with grand action, fit for a cabriolet, see him before you shake hands upon it." Mr. Panmure Gordon did not see the horse which he bought from Mr. Vagliano for 230 gaineas, and when he got the animal he found that his action was not grand in the least. No accusation was made against Mr. Vagliano: but the recollections of the parties as to what passed differed considerably. Mr The steamer Glengarry, which arrived at Panmure Gordon believed that the horse had been recommended as having an exceptionally magnificent action, and that he was being sold because he could not be matched. The Sydney Daily Telegraph, referring to the tes trade, says :- To Australia alone do the exports from China show any advance, and Indian and Ceyton planters are now making determined efforts to win this market, too, from what they are pleased to call the "posts and rails" ferior teas chiefly imported at present. Their forts, at any rate as far as New South Wales is concerned, would seem to be meeting with some degree of success. Thus, out of a total mport of tex in 1887 of 6.518.6951bs. only 161,584lbs., or 2.5 per cent., came from India or Caylon. Next year 7,461,621lbs, were imported 426,338lbs., or 5.7 per cent, being from the countries named, while in 1889, 549,2351bi. of Indian and Ceylon tens arrived, being 8-1 per gent. of the total importations of tea for the years. The significant changes which are taking place in the ten trade cannot fail to be of interest to Australians, for perhaps no other people n the world are to an equal extent tea drinkers. How deeply concerned the inhabitants of these polonies are in all that affects the tea trade will be readily understood when it is stated that here the average consumption of tea per head of population is no less than 12loz. per annum, as compared with 73cz. in Great Britain, 21cz the United States of America, and los. in France and Germany. Any changes, therefore, which bring to the market a cheap tea of good quality will be welcomed.
